tenkara-style tackle can be forced to fit a normal “fly fishing” style of casting. The trouble is, by doing that, you lose all the major benefits of tenkara. Holding the casting line off the water and the ability land the fly (and nothing else) on a very precise spot are huge advantages. Casting a heavy fly line out horizontally and letting it fall onto the water does not give you access ...

Tenkara is the modern Japanese version of the earliest fly fishing. People have been fly fishing for thousands of years. And for thousands of years, a rod, a line and a fly were all they had - and all they needed. The fly reel is a relatively modern invention, and it offers a significant advantage - holding extra line so a fisherman can make long casts and a hooked fish can make long runs ...
